Burgos Called 'the Trial Of the Franco Regime'

By Richard Eder

MADRID, Dec. 31 (NYT).-The trial in Burgos of Basque nationalists on charges ranging from banditry to murder is ended, but it is not over.

It seems likely to be one of those key events that focus on the contradictions, the frustrations, the latent hostilities and, in fact, the fabric of a whole society. "It is," one Spaniard said, "the trial of the Pranco

Generalissimo Francisco Franco has ruled Spain with one part force and two parts agility, with one part repression and two parts dissembling. Spain has been described in recent years as "dictatorship tempered by anarchy." Now the leadership's nerves seem to be frayed, and Spain appears to be more nearly an anarchy stiffened by dictatorship.

Two hours before Gen. Franco received the sentences yesterday from Gen. Tomas Garcia Rebull commander of the Burgos region, nobody in the govern-ment appeared to have any real ides whether Gen. Garcia Re-bull would hand them over or not. Until almost the last minute nobody could say whether Gen. Franco would make his year-end address to the nation last night—one of the regime's most invariable rites.

Pressure From Military

There was a strong impression that military factions had been using the sentences all along to compel Gen. Franco, who seems to have had little desire to order executions, to come to some kind of agreement about the course the government will take over the next months.

How far the military leaders have imposed on Gen. Franco, or to what extent yesterday's decision is, on the contrary, an assertion of his authority over a right-wing military factionis not clear at the moment. It should become clearer over the next month or two.

For the short run, two predictions are widely made. The first is that there will be at least a temporary tightening up by the police. A stricter control over the press, which has slipped relatively free during the con-fusion of the last few weeks, is also expected.

The Franco leadership takes the principle of authority very seriously, and commuting the death sentences under internal and international pressure was a shatteringly difficult decision. It would seem, hy the regime's lights, to cell now for a counterbalancing show of firmness. Cabinet Change

The second prediction is that there will be a new cabinet within the next month or two-The present cabinet, led by Adm. Luis Carrero Bianco and dominated by the faction led by under heavy fire from all quar-

The army leadership has virtually demanded its replace-ment. The Council of the Realm, a powerless but prestigious body that includes prominent Spaniards from various parts of the regime, told Gen. Franco Tuesday that he should change the a change. Any revised cabinet would probably either retain adm Carrero, an extremely committive man who makes up to he lack of popularity by the fact that Gen. Franco trusts him or would include another him tery figure of similar strips it also would presumably contain factions hostile to Mr. Lope

There is a widespread action however, that such an arrangement would not be sufficient to deal for very long with the situation of near-breakdorn to which the Franco regime was brought by the Burgos trial and its repercussions.

Vesterday's commutations have brought a vast sense of relief to wide sectors of the regime as well as to the opposition. There is a general on. viction that the carrying out of death sentences would have sacrificed many of the fairs, limited though they may be that Spain has made in her internal development and nor international reputation der the last 15 years.

In the mid-1950s, Gen. France broadened his regime, then a simple right-wing dictatoring rapidly running downhill, and brought in men who were con-servatives and authoritaries but who were believers in teonomic liberalism integration into Europe and a gradual emlution of political structures.

Many of their policies was put into effect. Even political evolution was adopted as an nfficially sanctioned goal. But Gen. Tranco never allowed the basic power of the regime to get out of his hands, political evolution threatened in put even a share of power in the hands of people outside the regime, there was a sharp if temporary return to of methods until the threat ass

Basic Contradiction The regime was thus working atop a contradiction with when only Gen. Franco seemed confortable.

Regional Influence

One's choices depend in some measure on the region in which he lives. Mr. Nixon has only a slight edge over Sen. Ken-nedy in the East, with Pope Paul VI running a close third. But the President far outstrips the rest of the field in the Mid-

President Nixon, however, is outscored by Billy Graham in the South, with both men easily leading the rest of the field. To identify the most admired men today, a total of 1,517 adults of both sexes were interviewed in a survey carried out Dec. 5-6. These two questions were asked to determine first and second choices: "What man inat you have heard or read about, living today in any part of the world, do you admire the most? Who is your second choice?" - Following are the top ten in the voting:

History's Unbroken Flow

The stream of history may flood or wane; it may rush tempestuously or move slowly and placidly. The one thing that stream does not do is pay any attention to the markere men place to measure its course. The Zouave on the Pont de l'Alma long told Parislans how high the Seine was rising, but he could not tell the Seine how high to rise. The year 1970 has ended, and men will anxiously tally its events, and try to prognosticate what 1971 will bring. But history-not the dates and names that are taught in unimaginative schools, but the living, endlessly moving tide of thingsdoes not wait to be catalogued.

It is a pity that mankind as a whole cannot follow the old Chinese custom and add up all its bills as the year ende; pay them, and start with a clean ledger. It would be very helpful if some practices could be declared bankrupt; if some, showing a good balance of good over ill, could be carried on into 1971 without the burden of failures in other departments of life. Unhappily, so many of man's activities cannot be so precisely appraised; unhappily, too, men can be etobborn to admit error, or simply confused over what is good and what is bad. They may pay their hills promptly within 30 days, or seek to be discharged from them by the courts. But their ideas, their prejudices, their hopes, are not so amenable to the calendar. So history-which is the record of men and women-flows on from year to year, refusing to submit to being rung in or rung out, however bells may clash in the steeples, or whistles blow, or crowds shout, at midnight on Dec. 31.

Yet that very stubbornness is not without its usefulness. . Humanity cannot yet be placed in columns of debts and credits, in terms of universally accepted values. Suppose one had applied arithmetical principles of profit and loss to the world at, eay, the end of 1940, just 30 years ago. Would Hitler and Mussolini have been declared bankrupt? Or France? Or Britain, standing alone?

The ancient Greeks placed hope at the bottom of Pandora's box of troubles. Similarly, when all that went wrong in 1970 is added up, that great intangible cannot be left out of the accounting. And, whatever else may be left behind by the sweep of history, hope is still borne onward, into 1971. It is the one sure note that sounds in the always familiar, yet ever new, chorus of "Happy be useful to sketch how far the idea of a great-power role in Mideast peacekeeping has come since it was first publicly proposed last August, in these columns, and how far it still bas to go. For the fact is that in a half-year's time it has become generally accepted that any settlement which Arabs and Israelis may make between themselvee must, if it is to endure, be guaranteed by outside powers; and that the already existing involvement of Moscow and Washington and the superiority of their resources dictate for them major peacekeeping roles. Considered new and startling, even outlandish. in August, the idea is now regarded almost everywhere-even where it is rejected or challenged—as a piece of political furniture fairly sure to be set up in the region and to stay for a long time to come.

The President vetoed official comment on the idea "at this time" soon after a high administration source surfaced it in a background session last August, but Secretary of State Rogers last week stated that the United States is "prepared to play a responsible in providing guarantees" so long as its part "is supplementary to an agreement and is agreeable to the parties." Mr. Rogers's endorsement; was somewhat obscured in the headlines by his curiously emphatic rejection of a force composed of Soviet and American units alone-curious because President Nixon has gone to great lengths, notably in his Oct. 23 address at the United Nations, to stress the primacy of Soviet-American relations, "in particular" in the Mideast.

Then, last October, the Soviet Union floated a similar hint of interest in joining a permanent peacekeeping force. Egypt's president last week solicited immediate Big Four guarantees of "secured boundaries." And Israel's president said "outside guarantees. . . may be a topic for discussion and consideration after secure, defensible and agreed borders are established between the parties concerned and not as a substitute for this." In brief, the four principal states

On the eye of Arab-Israeli talks, it may involved—the two blg powers and their wards all agree in principle on some form of outside peacekeeping guarantees.

The actuality, of course, is something else. Helpful public discussion is just beginning on how to cope with such specific problems as: which military functions might be performed by Russia and America and which ones might better be left to others, whether the two big powers should act by themselves or with others under the formal umbrella of the United Nations, when during the settlement process the international presence might best be constituted, how would it be held in place during a local crisis, and how in such a crisis Russians and Americans could prevent either of the local parties from drawing them in.

These are not mere "details" which automatically fall into place once the peacekeeping concept is accepted. On the contrary, they are major issues loaded with difficulties of substance, and in the absence of workable solutions for them, the concept is merely a dream. The appeal of international peacekeeping has never been, however, that it would be easy or flawless but that it may offer a better promise of stability and peace than any other idea or mechanism lying

In our judgment, the idea ought to he examined in depth not only in the executive branch but in the U.S. Congress. For the use of American military units-possibly including ground troops-in a Mideast force would involve a kind of commitment and a degree of risk whose extent and implications the Congress ought first to understand and approve. The general interest of the country, to eay nothing of the dignity of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, argues for euch an examination. Previously the matter was important. It has become essential now that the secretary of state has publicly welded it into place as a central emerging element of American policy in what is, after all, perbaps the most dangerous region of the world.

Franco Opts for Humanity

Generalissimo Franco has struck a rare blow for decency and humanity in Spain by commuting the death sentences of six Basque nationalist guerrillas to 30-year jail terms. His action was a clear censure of the army court that had sentenced the six and decreed unusually cruel prison terms for nine other defendants.

It was also at least an implied rebuke for military and Falangist hard-liners who had demanded death for the Basques, harsher crackdowns on all protests and demonstrations, and restoration of greater authoritarianism throughout Spanish life.

In responding to pleas for clemency that poured in from all parts of Spain and most parts of the world-from friendly governments, bar associations, civil rights, labor and religious organizations, including the Vatican-Gen, Franco kept alive not only six men but the chance fer restoration of Spain to the Western European family.

Despite all the appeals and pressuresand despite the obvious sadism of a courtmartial that could decree double death sentences for three of the Basques-this had to be an extremely difficult decision for the Caudillo in the deepening twilight of his long rule. The six defendants admitted membership in a guerrilla organization dedicated to Basque independence, and five of them proudly proclaimed themselves to be Marxist-Leninists.

Of greater concern for Franco, young army WASHINGTON. - Enigmatic to officers and Falangist elements had shown their capacity for organizing mass rallies in Spanish cities far larger than those mounted in behalf of the Basques, and for turning these into demonstratione against not the generalissimo himself but his relatively moderate and technocratic cabinet.

Gen, Franco may yet feel it necessary to appease these forces by harsher rule and by purging his more moderate and modern cabinet ministers. He has already tried to blunt their criticism by invoking more repression, including police power to detain suspects for six months without charges or

DARIS.—The somber year of 1970 ended with patches of unexpected light when Franco commuted the sentences of six Basque nationalists sentenced to die and almost immediately thereafter the Soviet regime reduced the death penalty for two Jewish citizens condemned for an alleged skyjacking conspiracy. The latter decision was clearly taken some time before it was publicly announced, since the Mos-cow correspondent of "Land Og Folk," organ of the Danish Com-munist party, published it as a The certainty even before it proved to between Public opinion throughout the world has tended to link the two trials, much as it was the custom in the late 1930s for democratic nations to assell with equal vigor the dictatorships of Pascism and Communism. Indeed, it is an odd coincidence to see this decade start with an apparent resurgence of neo-Fascism in Spain and neo-Stalinism in Russia.

Yet both such trends are doomed to ultimate dead ends. Fascism, because it contributed insufficient compensation to its citizens for the loss of freedom they suffered and because it inevitably pointed toward war as policy, proved to be a costly failure and was deteated on tigial recurrences of certain of its aspects, as shown in the Leningrad trial, denunciations of Solzhenytsin and resumption of a little cold war are unlikely to gain massive momentum.

The reason is that an utterly despotic approach to Communism is outmoded by Communism's own achievements and also by the development of an international communications system which makes it quite impossible nowadays to wholly isolate Soviet citizens from quintessential difference between the Basques tried in Burgos and the Jews tried in Leningrad is that the former wanted to stay isside their country and reform it from within whereas the latter wanted to leave their country and find a new haven in Israel.

Moreover, the Basque trial was directly related to Spain's internal crisis and the struggle for the post-Franco succession, whereas the Leningrad trial was at least indirectly related to Soviet foreign policy. Moscow quite obviously feels it must appease the Arabs and relieve them of any fear that bundreds of thousands of Russian Jews might some day sweep into Israel and it apparently wants to discourage potential emigrants from any such dream.

A Reproach in 1967

When he was about to aunounce for President in 1967, in what seemed a quirotic effort that could only destroy his party's prospects for victory, this reporter reprosch-ed him for having forgotten an aphorism of Eraest Lefever's he

the end, Eugene McCarthy has said his farewells to the Senate, but not to political life, promising in some unspecified way to express his interest in the issues of the war, the economy and political reform and holding open the option of running again for the presidential nomination.

The farewells to him in the Senate were unusually hunest. The dozen or so men who spoke of his retirement voiced both their affection and their puzzlement. Philip Hart of Michigan, his desimate these dozen years and his friend, was perhaps the most touching when he remarked that at a time when many young people feit near-despair three years ago, "Gene Mc-Carthy turned my children around. He gave them hope," with his cam-

The oratory was undoubtedly restrained, by the suspicion among his colleagues that McCarthy might not resist the temptation to deflate the pemposity of the occasion with one last wisecrack.

He is Restrained

Instead, he chose to reply in the detached, almost fronic man-ner he finds comfortable, speaking of the Senate not in terms of what had meant to him, but as an institution in American life. His parting message to his colleagues was predictably iconolastic. While the President, the press and much of the public has faulted the Senate this year for processtination and indecision on major issues, McCarthy assured his fellows that their behavior is in accordance with the constitutional intent and purpose and . . . in the best tradition of the Senate."

As usual, one is uncertain how meaning that defeat would have far the McCarthy tongue was in been had it not et least confronted the issue that was dividing the country. McCarthy knew that and he acted on that knowledge, in defiance of the conventional wisdom of the time.

Did He Cop Out?

In the last two years, his course of action has been equally puzzling; many accuse him of "copping out" on the issues he himself raised. But reporters should approach with caution the task of making judgments on politicians whose actions they have chronically misjudged. In McCarthy's case, the best course may simply be to listen to the man, read what he is saying, and think about it.

In "Frantiers of American De-morracy," published ten yests ago, he wrote something pertinent to his Own case:

"The teak of the politicism is in a sense, even more humble than that of the moralist... As he pro-ceeds in action, his general guide must be to make his decisions in the hope that by these decisions an imperiect world may become somewhat more perfect; or that at least . . he can save it from becoming even less perfect, or, finally, from becoming entirely evil and perverted. He can try to pre-vent degradation, prevent decline, and, if possible, to move things forward and upward toward right and justice. That is the purpose and the end of political action had once quoted with approval in and the compromises that go with action."

By that standard, and by almost any other, Eugene McCarthy dewithin the system. His party was served defeated, but how much more defeated. serves the praise his colleagues of-

Mobutu's Housecleaning

Wringing Out the Old

By Jim Hoagland

NAIROBI Kenya Gen. Joseph D. Mobulu's spectacular house-cleaning of his cabinet this week in the Congo (Kinahasa) may be an attempt to restore momentum to the much-hersided Congolese recovery, which has sagged badly in the last few months.

Two days after he was sworn in for a new seven-year term as the Congo's president, Mobusu ousted 11 of his ministers.

Heading the list of changes was the removal of Foreign Minister Cyrille Adouls, former ambassador to Washington and ex-Congolese premier. Adoula, who has been seriously ill for more than a year, was the last of a small group of Congolese politicians who were once trusted advisers of Mobutu. but have now all fallen from

Mobutu also dropped Informa-tion Minister Jean-Jacques Kande, his longest-serving cabinet min-

The changes climar a year that has even Mobutu get rid of almost all the experienced administrators in the Congolese government.

This apparently eliminates any potential political rival to the general within his own regime. But it leaves him with two high problems; an increasingly trustrated group of former insiders who now have nothing to do, and an untested government team that comes aboard just as the Congolese economy hits its roughest

Mobilet has been able to heard the foreign-exchange earnings from copper, partially because of the availability of American aid for spending on the country's social needs. But new he may have to dip deeply into the $250 million in foreign reserves that he had built up.

There are also signs that the expected coonomic reconciliation with Belgium, which was supposed to give a lift to the Congo's financial prospects this year, is in fac Möbutu upset the Belgians this summer by taking a mining conces sion away from a Belgian-operated firm and giving it to an American consortium. A few weeks ago, the general accused Belgian banks of currency-anuggling, and shut down a bank in Kinshasa.

Currency-smuggling has been so open in the Congo that observers were pussled by Mobutu's sudden "discovery" of the bank's doings. Even more surprising was the use of the scandal to discredit the former finance minister and governor of the Central Bank, Albert Ndels, rated by economic experts one of the most astute financial men in the Congolese government. He is one of half a dozen major camualties among key Congolese decision-makers this year.

The Sole Candidate Mobutu, who seized power in a military coup in 1965 and who was the only candidate for president in last month's national elections, is also reportedly facing more proplems in the Congolese eastern prov-inces, where the central government's control has never been firmly established.

Reports circulating in diplomatic circles here indicate a renewal of guerrilla fighting in the east, although it is difficult to gauge how extensive it is. One report, which could not be confirmed, indicates that a large number of Congolese refugees have been moving into southern Burundi over the past few weeks as the fighling inten-

The guerrillas are reportedly the remnants of the leftist Simba re-Congo throughout the last decade. The Congolese believe the Simbas are getting small numbers of arms that are being smuggled across Tanzania, and supplied by the Chinese.

The rebels offer no threat to Mobutu's regime in Kinshasa, retisble sources say. But the guer-rills raids do indicate that the Congolese Army, the base of Mobutu's power, has not extended its control over the provinces as thoroughly as the Kinshasa governviceman to be treated by a host country. If we are having trou-

I am a black Regular Army major assigned to the 97th General Respital in Germany. I am a physician and completed my residency in August, 1970, at which time I select for and received my present three-year assignment in Frankfurt.

When my wife and I arrived in Germany I was informed by the [rental] agent who had obtatoed my economy [off-base] address that I would not be able to move It is comforting to believe that the landlord stated it was already public opinion has the strength to rented. The agent then informed me that it would be difficult for me to find economy quarters ing it crime to try and emigrate. hereuse many landlords would not There is logical probability that this rent to blacks. This agent is still trying hard to find economy quarters for us, but to date has been unsuccessful. We have moved into transient Army billets.

I have seen at least six other agents and landlords and the resuits have been the same or worse. Either nothing is available or what is available is poor and inadequate or is too expensive or the landlord will not rent to blacks.

Government quarters are not available. We all have to wait a long period of time for them; in long period of time for them; in our situation we cannot get gov-erment quarters for at least dight more weeks. It is unfair and frustrating to be in transient ful-lets. We should be given decent government quarters now or as soon as the part one is available. The commanding officer of the hospital has helped us as much floor of the Hesse Support District, has helped us by moving us to a two-roun transient billet. Premier Lists Greek Gains In Past Year

Cites Internal Peace and Living Standard

ATHENS, Dec. 31 (Reuters).— Premier George Papadopoulos told Greeks in a New Year broadcast tonight that he wanted to return to constitutional rule but did not have the right to "risk the fate of the nation with premature action." The 51-year-old former artillery colonel listed the achievements of his regime, which seized power in April 1967, as internal peace, monetary stability, high productivity, a high standard of living and a wellorganized defense system.

The democracy we have in Greece now is much more substential than that of several countries which like to show a particular sensitivity on questions of democism by usurping the title of democ racy," he asserted.

Greece is serving the security of the free world and contributing to world peace, he said.

We wish to cooperate with ever country and we do not interfere in the internal affairs of any state. We hope that other nations could taught how purposeless it i to interfere in our affairs, the premier added.

Charles Bronson, Jill Ireland, James Mason, Liv Ullmann in "Night Visitors."

The Bad-Good Guy as a Hero

By Thomas Quinn Curtiss PARIS, Dec. 31.—Where have all the heroes gone?

Until quite recently the movie hero was a figure of unimpeachable integrity whose spotless purity matched only that of the angelic heroine. Today he is no better than he should be and frequently it is difficult to distinguish him from a foulmouthed barroom bum.

Take for example the hero of Terence Young's new "The Night Visitors" the Marignan-Pathe and the Danton in English).

This "hero," one Joe Martin, played by Charles Bronson, is an American who appears, during the first reel, to be a decent bloke. Happily married though a bit intemperate, he earns an honest living, fishing and transporting tourists in his launch on the Riviera. But one evening a man telephones his home and threatens to kill him. Before Joe can get his wife out of the house, a gangster breaks in and Joe promptly breaks the in-truder's neck—the sound of bone-cracking being loudly registered—and sets about the disposal of the corpse along the seaside cliffs. Naturally enough, Mrs. Joe demands an explanation and it is disclosed that her husband's past is slightly soiled. While serving in the U.S. Army in Germany, Joe struck an officer and was sentenced to a two-year term behind the bars. He escaped from the stockade with three other prisoners and during the getaway a German policeman was fatally stabled. Joe, of course, is innocent but his companions are a bad lot. The would-be killer whom Joe has just slain is one of his former companions. The other two with an accomplice arrive and insist that Joe aid them in their drug traific or they will inform against short cut. Despite all that, Joe proves loyal husband and a fine foster-father to his 12-year-old stepdaughter when she is orled by a lecherous legionnaire as the bad men hold the family captive at a mountain hideaway. But, though a modern hero, Joe would never have passed muster in the days of Harold Bell Wright cowboys who, when gazing into the beantiful eyes of the prairie schoolmistress, always thought of their mothers. Certainly, Douglas

As the scenario is so grotesque, his endeavors are in All his artful nuanceshis stiff bearing, his overt sadism, his ringing commands, his stable boy language, his crude amorous maneuvers-pale before the ridiculous screenplay itself-it is difficult to refrain from laughing as one absurd situation is followed by another for an hour and a half.

Far less funny is "Le Distrait" (at the Concorde-Pathé), written, and performed by a would-be comedian known as Pierre Richard. This Richard is a gawky, unkempt fellow whose mop of tangled yellow hair suggests at first that we have a loquacious Harpo Marx before us. He has strung together a collection of singul-arly inister gags and proceeds to enact them transleally under the mistaken impression thet he is the new Jacques Tatl. He impersonates a publicity agency idea man and one must agree with his employers that his no-tions of advertising, like his jests, are simply terrible.

In contrast, we have a revival of Harry Langdon's 1926 film. "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp" (at the Pagode; and, though the Pagode management has idiotically neglected to supply any musical accompaniment, which casts a chill on the comedy. it remains a hilarious piece of slapstick, mocking, amusingly, an advertising campaign (a shoe-manufacturer sponsors a cross-continent hiking race to publicize his wares) a comic satire akin to that which Mr. Richard has so lamentably attempted. The wistful Langdon, overshadowed in his day by Chaplin and Keaton, is now seen to have been an artist of

Films in New York

NEW YORK, Dec. 31.—This is how critics for The New York Times rated new movies in

New York:

"Brewster McCloud," directed by Robert (M*A*S*H) Altman and starring, among others, Sally (M*A*S*H) Kellerman is mostly "dim, pretentious and more than a little cruel," reports Vincent Canby. "It made me uneasy, as I'm inclined to be when I meet a $150,000-a-year movie executive whose newly freed spirit is expressed by his custom-made dungarees, his shoulder-length, 'styled' hair and his love beads. It's imitation hip." It is about Brewster McCloud (Don Cort) who lives inside Houston's Astrodome secretly preparing to fly with Wherever he goes, he is followed by a mother-protector, L (Sally Kellerman), who once had wings of her own. The film, says Canby, attempts to be a "timeless myth about innocence and corruption," Brewster McClond copes with ell sorts of terrible people who keep getting between him and

It all has to do with a 36-year-old director named Alex who "having made an immensely successful first film, sinks into controled despair as he tries to find a new project." says Canhy. Bombarded hy suggestions and family irritations, Alex begins to think that he and Mr. Fellini are spiritual kin-and Fellini promptly appears in a series of fantasies. Even Jeanne Morean pops in to do a song from "Jules and Jim"—François Truffaut being another Mazursky-Tucker favorite. "By evoking memories of other, much better movies, Mr. Mazursky and Mr. Tucker simply call attention to the self-indulgent emptiness of their own," Canby continues. But he cites Mazursky'e directorial skill—"the scenes involving Mr. Sutherland (and others) have an unpretentious charm to them that is quite special. 'Alex in Wonderland, is a movie looking for a movie, which was only the frame, not the substance of '8 1/2' that Mr. Mazursky and Mr. Tucker have obviously looked at and loved, but never really seen."

"Fools," is a film that "displeases in every aspect—but in none more etrenuously than in the facile profundity and fatuous life-assertion of the screenplay," Roger Greenspun thinks "Although the performances are "The Lady in the Car With Glasses and Gun," was directed by Anatole Litvak, based on a novel by Sebastien Japrisot. with a screenplay adaptation by Richard Harris and Eleanor Perry. "While it is not as good as it ought to be, given the ex-cellence of its fiction and some of its leading cast, it is nevertheless good enough in mood and in performance to offer more than routine satisfaction to any lover of mystery films," says Roger Greensoun The lady (Semantha Eggar) works in a Paris advertising agency. The car is a white American convertible with which her boss (Oliver Reed) entrusts her after she drops him and his wife (Stephane Audran) at the airport. The glasses belong to the lady, who is exceedingly myopic. The gun? Perhaps to the dead man whose body she finds in the trunk of the car. Greenspun says that some of the pieces don't fit together. "Consequently, the film looks rather like an example of the decline craftsmanship - effective, well-colored, but uncertain in line and construction. Samantha Eggar, Greenspun adds, "is so fine that she is in herself justification for the movie."

"The Aristocrats," is a "funny, warm and sweet animated cartoon package," says Howard Thompson. It comes from the Walt Disney Organization and is set in Paris and surrounding countryside. "The plot concerns the 'catnapping' of an elegant mama cat and her three kittens," an original story credited to Tom Rowe and Tom

"Detective Belli," an Italian film directed by Romolo Guerrieri, stars Franco Nero as the "hard-hitting, though somewhat dishonest detective who slugs first and asks questions later." says Times man Greenspun, There is enough material in the movie for "at least three ordinary movies and several television plots as well. Furthermore, there are, on every level of bad taste, enough modern and traditional interiors to house a fair-sized city." There were 1,230 major U.S. corporate mergers completed in 1970, down 28 percent from 1969 and down 33 percent from 1968, according to Mergers and Ac-quisitions magazine. It cited the decline in market values of stocks on major exchanges as the main reason for the drop in corporate consolidations. All the transactions involved the exchange of at least $700,000 in cash or securities. It noted the drop in merger activity was the sharpest in the third quarter, but activity increased somewhat in November and December, as stock prices and securities transactions showed gains. The biggest 1970 merger, and the biggest of any year, was International Telephone & Telegraph's acquisi-tion of Hartford Fire Insurance, valued at $1.8 billion.

Weird distributions at the bridge table often give rise to weird episodes. The diagramed deal is an example. West responded two spades to East's one no-trump opening bid, over South's bid of two diamonds. North "raised" his partner to five diamonds, and South launched into five hearts, a contract that would probably

The choice of lead became significant also when North persevered to six diamonds, cursing silently. West doubled on the dubious ground that the opponents should not be able to make a slam when East had opened a strong no-trump. Events should have shown that he was wrong in this assumption.

East was praying that his partner would lead a club, the only suit that had not been bid, directly or indirectly, by the opposition. But West woodenly led a spade and South was now in a position to make all the tricks.

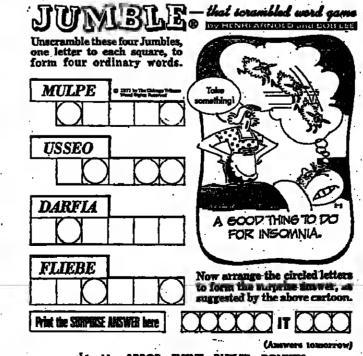

All the needed to do was ruff in the dummy and play the heart jack, overtaking with the queen if East played low. A ruff of a low heart would establish the suit and high dismonds would be played. As it happens the queen falls, but South would be safe against any 3-2 trump division: If necessary he concedes the third round to the queen immediately and claims the remaining tricks. Even if West had led a club, removing South's re-entry for the heart suit, the slam would still have been made, declarer would have entered dummy with a spade ruif, drawn trumps and overtaken the heart jack with the queen to make 12 tricks.

Howard L. Goodkind, editor in chief. The Bucyclo Britannica. 16 volumes. 2,560 pp. $57.70 the set.

Reviewed by Thomas Lask

IF you are thinking of getting this set for a child (up to age 10), throw away all adult ideas about encyclopedias and put yourself in the bands of editors. Unless you have been very close to the material lately, your notions will be out of kilter. For one, this very junior edition is not all-inclus-ive. You will find Shakespeare but not Tolstoi, Stravinsky but not Schoenberg, Einstein but not Niels Bohr. On the other hand, you will find an entry on Benjamin Banneker. Who is he? Well you can look him up in "The Young Children's Encyclopedia."

There is a sympathetic article on mice, including a number of charming photographs, followed in turn by the story of the country mouse and the city mouse, which I read once again with great pleasure. There is an ingenious method of con-structing a piggy bank, an ar-ticle on how to arrange for a treasure hunt and how to get a model ship into a bottle. Obviously none of this is what admirers of the 11th edition of the Britannica had been led to expect in an enterprise of this appears to be somewhat haphazard, so is the approach of the users. Young children, say the editors, almost never look things up. It just doesn't occur to a 5-year-old to see what a set is in math or to trace the Amazon River to its source. Children up to 10 are browsers, say the editors; their attention span is likely to be short. They like to turn pages, rove through the illustrations. Anything may catch their fancy but not for too long. Thus the articles are designed to entertain as they inform: the text is always belanced by spacious and numerous drawings and the language is pegged to a level they can handle or understand and maybe follow if they are read to. In other words, the youngster may be having a perfectly good time without knowing that he is consulting an encyclopedia at all.

Most of the articles have been cast in the form of simple tales. There are no graphs, charts, tabular matter or fine print. Quite often the reader can identify with the central personage of the episode he is following. The piece on astronauts starts off by inviting the youngster to consider the job: lying on one's back on top of a tank of dangerous fuel and then being pushed off the ground with such force as to drive one's stomach out of the body. But the reward is a spectacular view of the planet. In an article on dance, ballet terms are not defined coldly but woven into the story of a ballet lesson. Sometimes the emphasis appears a little strange-to a nonexpert, that is. The piece on indbergh's flight across the Atlantic is presented in a short for The New York Times.

dramatic vignette. make ii? Does he have enough fuel? But the paine of the plane is not given; the manber of miles flown not stated; the route not socioated. Wouldn't a 10-year-old be interested in such details?

By and large it would appear that the articles are more successful with places, scientific facts and mechanical explana. tions than with cultural matters. The chapter that defines a bird is far more successful than the one on Lautrec or Beethoven And was it necessary to tacked the story about Newton and the apple even with the provise that it may not quite he true? I was surprised to see a noticeable absence of sports figures, Home Run Baker and Christy Mathew. son were much before my time, but even as a youngster I was fascinated by their exploits. There's virtually nothing on football. Maybe the editors thought the interested youngster would absorb enough fast by the other than the fathers for the control of the con sharing his father's favorite indoor sport on Sunday afternoon. I guess every child knows how to turn on the television. Rhymes and jingles of various lengths are scattered through out. They leaven the material, break up the formality of prose and catch the youngster's fancy. Sometimes scientific exposition is angmented by a brief poem. A sober article on the hippopotamus is followed by a six-stanza tribute that begins:

This handsome animal is called A hippopotamus.

That means a river horse. It looks More like a pig to us.

The verses in turn are festooned with a series of precise and festive drawings. I especially liked one in which the hippo stands coyly on the scale waiting to be weighed.

As a bonus for the parent and teacher, the publishers have inoluded a manual that lists every article with its proper age group, the main idea it is intended to convey and a listing of related pieces to be found elsewhere in the encyclonedia. And there is a reading list for those parents and children who want to go further. The age bracket, as the compilers of the manual point out, is not rigid. A child may be attracted to a drawing in an article way beyond his years, whereas an older youngster may return to a poem he learned a long while before. The point is that anything in these books may stimulate or provoke him. Let him loose and don't worry. Some parents may be concerned that the youngster may too easily grow out of these volumes. It's a possibility. But if they receive the kind of use the makers en-vision, there may be nothing left to grow out of.

This time it has been sunny with temperatures in the 60s since they arrived. Having spent all but three days working in-doors at frigid South Bend, Ind., since their Nov. 21 game with LSU, the Irish are enjoying the fresh air while adjusting to the Cotton Bowl's carpet of Astroturf, new this year. Their only experience on an artificial surface has been on Tartan.

The Longhorns appear confident. They began their Cotton Bowl workonts yesterday in full view of anyone who cares to watch. "The main thing we had to do was to get the Arkansas game out of our minds," linebacker Scott Henderson said earlier this week. "You point to a game and point to it. But it'e over now. We've been trying to get scared again."

Forty-eight hours before kickoff the Longhorn players laughed and joked about their cloud-of-dust offense, so conservative it makes Woody Hayes's Ohio State teams appear to be wide-open pro stylists by comparison.

Sonics Say Haywood Has Signed

Court Examining Jump From ABA

NEW YORK, Dec. 31 (NYT),— The Seattle Supersonics of the National Basketball Association announced in Seattle yesterday that Speneer Haywood, last season's American Basketball Association most valuable player and rookie of the year, had signed a multi-year contract with them. But there were indications that court entanglements might hold back Haywood's shift from one league to the other.

Haywood was in dispute with the ABA Denver Rockets over terms of his six-year contract. He had charged he wasn't getting what the Rockets bad promised him and he had gone to Federal District Court in Los Angeles in an effort to get that contract declared in-valid. Terms of the Denver contract had been valued at $1.9 milas Munich gets ready for the 1972 Olympic Games. Construction of the athletic sites on the outskirts of town is well advanced. Downtown Munich is filled with construction workers and their equipment, building new hotels, roads, parking lots and subways to deal with the expected flood of visitors. We are right on schedule and expect to have the athletic installations ready by the end of 1971," said Herbert Kunze, the secretary-general of the organizing committee.

is nearing completion. It will seat 43,000 and have standing room for another 32,000. Track and field events, team horse-jumping, the final soccer match and the closing ceremonies on Sept. 10 will take place there.

Finding Accommodations

Officials say one of their most difficult tasks is finding accommodations for the millions of visitors. But Kunze said he was confident satisfactory quarters would be found for all

The organizing committee has so far reserved 120,000 beds for each day of the Games. Of these, 30,000 are in Munich or within 18 miles of the city. The remainder are as far away as 65 miles, but are on main rail lines into the city. The bulk are in private homes, because even the 6,000 luxury-class hotel beds are not sufficient.

To prevent ticketholders from being stranded without accommodation, sales abroad will be coupled to lodgings. "No ticket will be sold without proof of lodgings and anyone who wants a bed in Munich during the Games must show a ticket for an Olympic event for each day of his stay," Kunze said.

A Million Requests The only exceptions will be Austria and Switzerland, whose borders are within easy driving distance of Munich and whose citizens will be allowed to buy tickets without lodgings. The same also applies to West Germans.

opening ceremonies and there are only 80,000 places in the stadium." Kunze said. The highlights of the competition will take place on the Munich Olympic grounds, 2 1/2 miles from the city's center.

The main exceptions are yachting, which will be contested in the Baltic scaport of Kiel in northern Germany and the canoe

Some equestrian events will be held in suburban Riem and archery events will probably be held in the English Garden, a large park within the city limits.

The main Olympic site was once a training ground for the Bavarian Army. It later became one of Europe's first airfields and after World War II was a dump for 383 million cubic feet of Munich's bomb rubble. The Olympic skyline consists of a 950-foot-high television tower, already completed, and an 300,000-square-foot tentlike roof which will cover half the Olympic stadium, as well as a closed stadium and the swimming stadium.

Water, Salt Threaten 4,000-Year-Old City

By Ralph Blumenthal

MOHENJO-DARO, Pakistan (NYT). - Experts at the ruins of this 4.000-year-old city in the Indus Valley have urged the government to take quick action to save the archaenlogical treasure from further deterioration caused by water and

The excavated city, which contained, among other things, toilets that drained into a central sewage system, is ln nn "alarmingly bad state of preservation," Arli Ayaz, the assistant custodian of the site, warned in an official report Oct. 8.

Ironically, irrigation, the very factor that has rendered the arid valley habitable again lu recent decades, is being blamed for the threat to Mohenjo-Daro, which is situated about 250 mlles north of Karachi, the largest city in Pakistan

The watering of the rice fields has introduced ground water that is soaking into the ancient brickwork. With the irrigation. the level of underground salt water is rising, seeping up through the foundations and walls, at some points to a height nf five feet above the ground. The seepage leaves behind feathery salt deposits that can be seen to be eating away the bricks.

The government has already banned rice cultivation within a mile of the ruins and archaeologists-despite the bitter ob-

Experts have also recommended waterproofing of the course of the Dadu Canal, several miles west of the ruins, to prevent water seepage into the surrounding soil.

The city is notable for its scores of brick-lined wells.

to make up for the crop loss around the ruins. Completion of the project is expected to take 16 years and ft will be financed, the government hopes, largely by the United Nations

Mohenjo-Daro was flourishing in 2500 B.C. and its origins undoubtedly were centuries earlier. The inhabitants, of non-Arvan racial stock, abandoned their city and about 40 similar sites in the Indus Valley after 1800 B.C. for unknown reasons. It has been theorized that the valley grew arid or that the danger of floods increased or that the city was invaded by neighboring tribes. side a moat.

Apparently the people Mohenjo-Daro were not warlike, for few weapons were found, mainly stone balls for throwing. But there were bronze fishooks, bronze mirrors, oil lamps, writing slates and clay figurines, including images of the "great mother goddess" also worshipped in the Middle East about the same period.

The name Mohanjo-Daro-"Mound of the Dead"-was giveo the city at the time of its excavation by the British in 1922 by the local Sindhis, who were impressed with the

PEOPLE:

"If you're in the right, you can hold out forever against city hall," said Adelia Corraz when ehe learned that the city of Bloomfield, N.J., has dropped a 43-year effort to collect an

In 1927, Bloomfield dug through Miss Corraz's property and installed a second sewer connection to a large plot of land she owned. "I rushed into the yard and saw a man digging there. Apparently the town just assumed I was going to subdivide my lot," said Miss Corraz, now 81. "I told them that I was not going to pay for 2 sewer that I didn't ask for, didn't want, and certainly wasn't going to use."

$85.47 sewer assessment.

Nevertheless the town has made periodic attempts during the 43 years to collect the money. Bloomfield officials who finally canceled the bill were unaware that Miss Corraz had lived in the home for 64 years, and acted on the advice of their auditors. They said it would cost more than the $85.47 to try to collect it.

"I certainly am relieved to be rid of this thing," she said. "I hope the mayor and council aren't going to hold a grudge."

Today's second opbeat item: Five months ago a pickpocket atole $35 from Thomas J. Shumillo, 77, while he knelt to pray in St. Basil's Catholic Church in Los Angeles. Wednesday the pickpocket returned the $35 plus a $15 Christmas gift in a Christmas card, postmarked from Bakersfield, Calif. "Dearest Pop," the card said. "I wish you very sincerely a Merry Christmas and thank you for that Sunday you went to church. How wonderfui I am to have a friend like you. For you make my life much happier. Please receive $15 as Christmas present. I took $35 from your wallet so I send you $50." The card, signed "God bless you, Ann," contained $50 and a crushed fresh rose.

"Nazi flags started to appear at the school and a number of senior boys joined the Hitier Jugend," the prince wrote. Seme stuck out against the Nazl takeover and one senior boy in particular, who was responsible for us juniors, so displeased these thugs that they caught him one night and shared his head. I lent him my Cheam second eleven cricket cap and I hope he has got it still."

Cheam was the English school the prince had previously attended. The book was a collection of articles about Kurt Hahn, the German educationalist, by people who knew him Prof. Hahn settled in Britain to escape the Nazis and act up Gordenstoun School in Sectiand.
